

Labour Law And Freedom: Further Essays In Labour Law

The difference between human trafficking and smuggling is that human smuggling is the facilitation of transport, attempted transportation or even entry of person illegally across an international border. This is a violation of one or more countries' laws through the use of frequent documents. This is mainly done in order for the smuggler to have some financial gain. In addition, it is done in order to send the families. One of the major differences is that human smuggling is done with the consent of the individual being smuggled and in many cases the person pays large sums of money in order to be assisted. On the other hand, human trafficking involves exploitation of other individuals through the use of force, coercion, threats and even deception. This involves abuse of human rights as the act is done against the will of the person being trafficked. Some of the human rights that are violated during the act include debt bondage and lack control over freedom or even labor. The aim of this act is mainly for sexual or labor exploitation (Rosh 2012).

United Nations define human trafficking as the recruitment, transportation, transfer, harboring or reception of persons, by means of the threat or use of force or other forms of coercion, of abduction, of fraud, of deception, of the abuse of power or of a position of vulnerability or of giving or receiving of payments or benefits to achieve the consent of a person having control over another person, for the purpose of exploitation (NATO Advanced Research Workshop 2011).

United States department defines human trafficking as a process of recruitment, transportation, and transferring, harboring or receiving humans by means of threat, coercion, abduction, fraud, deceit, deception or abuse of power with an aim for prostitution, pornography, sexual exploitation, forced labor, involuntary servitude, debt bondage, slavery or any other related practices (Shelley 2010).
