Abstract

The shift in global power has led not only to a diffusion of power, but also to a diffusion of ideas, concepts, principles, value and preferences in the last decades. A comprehensive approach called "security governance" has been introduced in order to cope with the problems caused by this conceptual change. Security governance, which presents an understanding of the concept of security beyond the issue of defense and encompasses the 'more diverse, less visible and less predictable', has become one of the most controversial issues both for academicians and defense experts. In this study, we aim to discuss the present condition of security governance both in Turkey and in the world in a comparative manner.

Keywords: Defense, Defense Institutions, Security, Security Governance, Turkey.

1. Introduction

Since the end of Cold War period, fundamental changes have transformed the transatlantic security architecture, posed a great challenge to the existing perception of security organizations and led to the emergence of a large number of new bilateral and multilateral organizations involved in security. Within the context of coherent and comprehensive global security management, NATO and the European Union revised their objectives and functions in order to face security threats more efficiently and also adapted new instruments to respond appropriately. The new primacy of security, which includes international terrorism and issues related to transnational crime, has thereby revolutionized the concept of governance and economic dimensions of international politics.

It has become a challenging necessity to design an enforceable system of global governance that can both serve and constrain sub-state, trans-state and traditional state actors. This new governance approach is also different in terms of breadth and variety of current concept of security because it also covers not only the matters of conflict and armaments but also the need to defend against terrorism, crime, diseases, natural disasters, environmental issues, socio-economic problems such as poverty, exclusion and overpopulation. Most papers on security governance would include a useful definition of security culture, but only a limited number of them pay attention to define how to establish a proper security culture.
